Claiming your mate can be murder. Bitter memories have kept Wolfe Trevlian away from New Orleans, but an alpha's call for help has him reluctantly returning to the Big Easy. His tasks sound simple: Keep an eye on things, and initiate a truce with the pack's enemies by killing a local pest. His target turns out to be the last creature on earth who should be his mate. His instincts insist otherwise, even after she fills his hide with silver and warns him to leave her alone. Arden Moran looked into the mind of her dying friend and saw the face of a killer. Vengeance has brought this half-human, half-vampire to New Orleans. Nothing will stop her from nailing her target, including the bossy, sexy werewolf who stirs both fear and desire within her. Wolves never been one to back down from a challenge, but saving, and then claiming, his female is easier said than done. Particularly with a mate who's pissed off every supernatural creature on the planet and is walking around with a price on her head. This book has been previously published. Warning: Contains a reluctant substitute alpha who didn't sign up for complications, a wary half-breed vampire who'd love to take no for an answer, especially since it's her no- and friends who refuse to interfere, figuring it's more fun to sit back and watch the fur fly.
