

Brett Warren can't seem to escape the memory of a failed relationship, even though thirteen years have gone by. While life in general is good, he would still like to find that special someone. Meanwhile, everything is pretty much routine. As a long-haul truck driver, he spends a lot of time away from home. A few dates here and there, a few days home, and back on the road. All of that will change in a few adrenaline-packed, pulse-pounding seconds on a Georgia Interstate. A totally new life is unleashed, along with changes he never saw coming in his wildest dreams. Sherry Tatum has been divorced for five years. Her husband disappeared with a younger woman and left her with a one-bedroom apartment and a pile of unpaid bills. Only her faith in God, and her family and friends see her through. She's about to discover that running late and being driven to distraction can turn into life-changing events. Both Brett and Sherry will discover that while things don't always turn out as planned, sometimes, they turn out even better. One last huge surprise will leave them both struggling to adapt.
