

These days the theory that you can ‘manifest’ whatever you want in your life simply by believing in it is becoming an accepted idea. Hundreds of books and films now allude to this ‘Law of Attraction’ type thinking, and ‘The Secret’ has been read or watched by millions of people worldwide. But what if it isn’t working for you? What if you’ve held onto your belief for years, but your life really hasn’t turned out as you wanted it to? What if your happy ending is eluding you, but your clock is loudly ticking? In ‘The Secret Girl’ a British woman takes ‘Law of Attraction’ thinking to task. Like many others she read ‘Eat Pray Love’ years ago and took it very seriously; enough to sell her home and move to Italy, opening doors to possible new lives and happy endings. But the happy ending never happened. So when she’s still single at 46 and an early menopause hits her – just when she’s really started to believe she could still have children and build a family – she has to reassess what she can now believe in. If you’ve ever struggled with believing that you can have the life you want, this book will help you to review your thinking. Ella’s journey shows how beliefs from decades before can affect what’s happening in your life now, but also how random meetings with strangers can help you to move your thinking to new places - if you allow it. What this book offers is the honest result of a life-long struggle with belief that prompted something of a life experiment. And the results are rather surprising.
