

The Risque Target

There's one name that has Agent Nala Dekker reaching for the gun holstered to her leg: Tantom Maddox, the one name her partner said before he died in her arms. After three years of searching for the faceless Tantom Maddox, his name has finally surfaced. Nala jumps on the first plane to Boston in chase of her long-awaited revenge. But instead of taking Tantom in for his crime or shooting him in self-defense, of course Nala nearly ends up in bed with the killer. So, it probably would've been a good idea to find out what her Target looked like before she went after him. Agent Tantom Maddox has completed his assignment in Mexico... and now it's time for his revenge. When Tantom finds a mysterious woman in his arms, and after he discovers exactly who she is, his Target, he must decide what to do with the gun concealed beneath her dress. Should he use it on her and kill her? Or spare her life and take her captive until he finds the answers he's been looking for? Somehow Nala's innocence comes into question by the dangerously sexy Tantom Maddox and he accuses her of being a cold-blooded killer. But why is Nala the one on trial, for Tantom's the one who killed her partner, isn't he? In this torrid twist of betrayal and seduction, will Tantom and Nala resist killing each other? Or worse, when the truth unfolds, will love become the only threat to their vindictive hearts? To My Readers: I enjoyed writing Tantom's character who doesn't like or want a bad boy? He's strong, clever, but like every mysterious man Tantom has a dark past and is wary of letting his heart come out from the shadows. Nala Dekker is witty, smart and like many modern women - she's a control freak. Their characters emerge through The Risqué Target. Nala pulls Tantom from his darkness, while Tantom relinquishes Nala's control, taking it in a way that Nala is unable to deny.
